

Dear Hiring Manager,

What drew me to this role is how close it is to the way I naturally work, I like taking something new, testing it myself, understanding where it works and where it does not, and then turning that into something useful.

Alongside my Master's in Data Science, I have been working in a production environment where I deal with real problems every day. Over time, I found myself going beyond just fixing issues and started building small solutions, experimenting with models, and recently working with LLM based systems. One of my recent projects combined rules, machine learning, and language models to reduce manual effort in log analysis, which is very similar to how agent based thinking works in practice.

I enjoy working independently, building quick proofs of concepts, and then stepping back to evaluate what actually adds value. That balance between building and thinking is what excites me about this role.

I would genuinely love the chance to contribute here and learn by doing.

Best regards,

Anchal Pathania
